Seeking Accreditation: An overview of Eligibility and Initial Accreditation

Organizations that offer certification to individuals in a specialty are known as Conformity Assessment Bodies (CABs). The FSAB was formed in June 2000 to assess objectively, recognize, and monitor those CABs that are forensic specialty boards seeking accreditation.

The FSAB accepts applications from qualifying forensic specialty certification bodies. The application can be found on the website at www.thefsab.org The FSAB has developed a program to review and evaluate the procedures and standards of those applicant certification bodies or CABs to confirm that they meet or exceed the FSAB Standards.

The FSAB follows ISO/IEC 17011:2017 Conformity Assessment-General requirements for accreditation bodies accrediting conformity assessment bodies. The FSAB evaluates the CAB applicants based on ISO/IEC 17024:2012 Conformity Assessment-General requirements for bodies operating certification of persons along with additional requirements that consider the special nature of forensic specialties. Successful applicant CABs are awarded an initial five-year accreditation.

General Guidelines for Submitting FSAB Accreditation Applications

Organizations considering seeking accreditation by the FSAB should access and review the Standards for Accrediting Forensic Specialty Certification Boards and the Application for Accreditation/Re-accreditation. These can be found on the website: www.thefsab.org

The information in these documents should inform interested parties of the scope and details of requirements for their organizations to seek and attain FSAB accreditation. An inquiry can then be made to any Director who shall inform the President and Secretary. The inquiry should include pertinent information about the organization that is considering seeking accreditation. After reviewing the information in the inquiry, the FSAB leadership may provide a point of contact, usually a Director or Affiliate.
